DYSPEPSIA.

IS that misery experienced when we suddenly become aware that we possess a diabolical arrangement called a stomach. The stomach is the reservoir from which every fibre and tissue must be nourished, and any trouble with it is soon felt throughout the whole system. Among a dozen dyspeptics no two will have the same predominant symptoms. Dyspeptics of active mental power and a bilious temperament are subject to Sick Headache; those of sedentary habits and phlegmatic have Constipation, while the thin and nervous are abandoned to gloomy forebodings. Some dyspeptics are wonderfully voracious, others have great irritability of temper.

Whatever form Dyspepsia may take, one thing is certain,

The underlying cause is in the LIVER, and one thing more is equally certain, no one will remain a dyspeptic who will

It will correct Acidity of the Stomach,
Expel foul gases,
Allay Irritation,
Assist Digestion,
and, at the same time

Start the Liver to working, when all other troubles soon disappear.

"My wife was a confirmed dyspeptic. Some three years ago by the advice of Dr. Steiner, of Augusta, she was induced to try Simmons Liver Regulator. I feel grateful for the relief it has given her, and may all who read this and are afflicted in any way, whether chronic or otherwise, use Simmons Liver Regulator and I feel confident health will be restored to all who will be advised."—WM. AN ENCHANTED PRINCESS.

I found her deep in the forest,
The beeches and elms between,
A delicate amber plane tree
'Mid masses of bronze and green;

A sorrowful, spellbound Princess
A waiting her lover there.
She said, "He will know me, surely,
By the veil of my yellow hair.

"He seeks me the wide world over,
He seeks me the whole year through,
To loosen the charm that binds me—
My Prince and my lover true?"

She shivered beneath her foliage,
And sighed in the twilight chill.
"Ay me! will thou find me never,
Thy love that thou seekest still?"

"I saw him," chirruped a blackbird,
"He passed by this very spot;
He is come and gone, O Princess!
He passed and he knew you not!"

The cold wind rustled her branches
Till the yellow leaves fell slow—
"He is dead and gone, O Princess,
Many a year ago!"

—Mrs. Graham Thomson.

SLAIN MAN'S LEE.

"This is the 'Slain Man's Lee,'" said my friend, casting himself down upon a grassy hillock which reared itself in the center of the little plain in which we stood.

"Wherefore so strange a name?" I inquired.

"Beneath this grassy covering rest the bones of hundreds of brave men."

"This, then, has been the scene of some battle in the olden time?"

"It has. I brought you from Selkirk on purpose to show it to you," answered my friend, Harry Ogilvie, "and tell you a story about it, if you like."

I instantly apprised my friend of the gratification it would afford me to listen to him, and took a seat beside him on the "Slain Man's Lee." It was not without a shudder, however, that I reposed my frame upon the sod that covered the remains of those who had once been living and breathing like myself.

"On this little plain, which is called Philiphaugh, on the 12th of September, in the year 1647, if my memory serves me aright," began Ogilvie, "the Marquis of Montrose received his first defeat in the war he had undertaken for the king. Here his victorious career received a terrible and almost irremediable check. There were several causes which led to this defeat.

"The marquis encamped here late at night with only half his usual force. The men of Athole had returned to their native hills. Two of his bravest officers were absent. Alaster McColl was waging an old feud amid the rocks and glens of Mingarry, and Lord George Gordon had been slain at Alford. On this night the marquis, who had never neglected it before, intrusted the placing of the picket guard to other hands. It seemed as if fate had determined to inflict a defeat upon the 'Great Marquis.'

"I relate this story in the words of my ancestor, Lord Lionel Ogilvie, who was one of Montrose's officers at the time, and whose wonderful preservation from death will, I think, interest you.

"They were sitting in their tent, Montrose and his captains, wearied by a long ride, leisurely sipping their wine and never dreaming of the close proximity of the enemy, when they were suddenly charged upon by three squadrons of the lowlands troops.

"The rout was instant and decisive. Beset on every side the Royalists gave way and fled in disorder. Upon this spot did Montrose succeed in rallying a portion of his army, and here the fight became desperate and deadly, and the slain of either side lay so thickly together after the battle that it was found impossible to inter each soldier separately, so a deep pit was dug, friend and foe were cast into it indiscriminately and the turf lightly heaped above their mortal remains. From that time this spot has been called the 'Slain Man's Lee.'

"But I have something more entertaining to tell you than these funereal details.

"Montrose succeeded in effecting his escape with most of his officers and cavalry, retreating step by step, but maintaining a determined front to the foe, and repeatedly charging them with great skill and valor. It was in one of these desperate charges that the Lord Ogilvie, who was but a stripling at the time, was taken prisoner.

"He was conveyed in close custody to Selkirk. The Covenanters exercised the most unrelenting rigor against all Royalists who were so unfortunate as to fall into their hands. Sentence of death was instantly pronounced against Lord Ogilvie, and the day of execution was fixed at an early date.

"His mother, the Countess Airlie, and Lady Flora Leithintie, his sister, hastened to Selkirk to unite their supplications in mitigation of his doom. Tears, prayers, the offer of princely bribes for his escape, were useless—the judges were inexorable.

"The fatal day drew rapidly near, and the night preceding that morning which was to be Lord Ogilvie's last upon earth his mother and sister visited him in his dungeon to bid him a last farewell.

"I will not linger over the agony of that meeting. For awhile they folded each other in a sad embrace, mingling their tears together.

"'Must you die, my brother!' exclaimed Flora with choked utterance. 'So young—so brave—thus early to be cut off—oh, it is dreadful!'

"'I expected death,' answered Ogilvie with sad composure. 'I took the common chance of all when I engaged in this strife, and what matters it if I meet death by the ax instead of the sword?'

"'The ax is for felons,' said the Countess of Airlie with asperity. "you are noble—an Ogilvie; at least they might have granted you a soldier's death.'

"'You shall not die, my brother!' cried Flora, with sudden energy. 'There is one chance for your escape. I shrank from disclosing it to you before, for I knew your noble nature would scorn to accept the alternative. But I will accept it for you. I had rather make any sacrifice than see you die.'

"'What sacrifice?' asked Ogilvie.

"'Explain this mystery,' demanded the countess.

"'Listen. You know Colonel Roche, your jailer, and commandant of this town?'

"'An unprincipled libertine and reckless adventurer. A soldier of the German wars, hired by the canting Covenant to fight its battles.'

"'Yet still he holds your life in his hands and possesses the power to set you free.'

"'Undoubtedly.'

"'Then you shall be free.'

"'My dear Flora, you speak in riddles.'

"'My riddle is easily solved. Know that I have made a conquest of this bluff soldier. He has confessed his love for me and made a proffer of his hand.'

"'And you?' questioned the countess sternly and bridling with suppressed wrath.

"'Laughed in his face.'

"'You did well,' answered the countess, mollified. 'What presumption! An unknown soldier asking for the hand of Lady Leithintie! That comes of your covenant—a murrain on it!'

"'It is not so much the hand of my sister, mother, that he desires,' returned Ogilvie, 'but the broad lands and title that hand bestows. We have indeed fallen upon sad times when such as he dare to hope for such alliances. Many a brave man and noble have already fallen beneath the ax, while their estates have been bestowed upon these needy adventurers. He offered you some inducement to become his wife—did he not, my sister?—and I can almost guess what it was.'

"'He did—the condition was a precious one—your liberty, if I consented.'

"'Never!' said Ogilvie, emphatically; 'never would I accept my liberty at such a price.'

"'I care not—I would wed a fiend, if that would save you!' cried Flora, with energy. 'Mother, he is your youngest born—you will not see him die—urge him to consent!'

"'Flora, you are mad to think of such an act,' replied the countess coldly. 'Death is but an instant's pang—disgrace, eternal. The escutcheon of the Ogilvies has never been stained by a mesalliance. Think of it no more.'

"Flora burst into tears and fell upon her brother's neck.

"'Oh,' she cried reproachfully, 'I can save you and you will not let me.'

"'There may be another method of escape,' said the countess, musingly. 'You may risk death for him, but not disgrace. A plan has this instant suggested itself to me. You are nearly of the same height—the color of your hair and eyes the same; why not change clothes with him? He could leave the dungeon with me, undiscovered.'

"'And leave my sister here to suffer indignity at the hands of my captors? Never!' cried Ogilvie passionately.

"'Tut, boy,' returned the countess impassively, 'they will offer her no indignity—they can but keep her a prisoner a short time and then release her.'

"'Consent, dear Lionel!' exclaimed Flora eagerly. 'I care not what becomes of me so that you escape.'

"Ogilvie required but little urging; the hope of life sprung up in his heart once more; the plan seemed indeed feasible and easy of accomplishment, and there was really no apprehension to be entertained for Flora; the Covenanters, with all their failings, were at least men and would not maltreat a woman.

"The change of garments was quickly effected. Ogilvie looked feminine enough to deceive any but the most curious eye. He was but eighteen and the down scarcely yet shaded his upper lip. Flora hid her sunny curls under his broad leaf hat and walked the dungeon floor with saucy steps, flaunting her gay doublet with a reckless air and laughing joyously at the metamorphosis.

"Ogilvie held her to his heart in a last lingering embrace, for he could not altogether forget the peril of their position, and then the mother and son hurried from the dungeon.

"They passed the turnkey unquestioned, passed on through the outer gate and stood in the open air.

"'Now, mother,' whispered, Ogilvie, 'speed to your lodgings, and remain to watch over Flora's safety. I know a friend, who resides near at hand who will furnish me with a disguise and the means of flight.'

"'Heaven guard you, my boy!' said the countess, as she proceeded on her way.

"Ogilvie turned into the next street. There were faithful adherents of the king lying perdu in the town, with the hope of saving him. He had been in communication with them and knew their hiding place.

"An officer came reeling along the street, and stumbled against him. The moon was shining brightly, and the recognition was mutual.

"'Colonel Roche—by all the fiends!' muttered Ogilvie, between his set teeth, and his hand felt instinctively for his sword hilt—but his faithful sword was not by his side.

"'Lady Leithintie,' stammered Roche, who was in a state of semi-intoxication, and he leered at the supposed maiden with what he intended to be a lovelorn expression. 'Lady Leithintie alone in the streets at midnight! Allow me to escort you home,'

"Ogilvie was bewildered and knew not what to do. At one moment he thought of gathering up the folds of his sister's damask robe and fleeing for his life, but the next he knew how vain it would be for him to attempt to escape, encumbered by his woman's attire.

"'Lady Leithintie,' said Roche, proceeding after this slight pause, 'I understand your presence here; you have just bid a last farewell to your brother, poor devil! but it is not yet too late to save him. Here we are at the door of my quarters; consent to my proposition, and I will step within, sign a safe conduct for your brother that will pass him beyond our lines, and then you shall go with me to the prison and see him set at liberty. After that we will wake up the chaplain of the regiment and have everything settled before cock-crow. Do you consent?'

"'I do,' answered Ogilvie, who had rapidly devised a scheme to escape from this dilemma.

"'Say you so, my beauty!' cried Roche, almost sobered by this acquiescence and the prospect of his approaching happiness; 'then follow me.'

"He rapped with the butt of his pistol at a low postern, which, after some delay, was opened by a slatternly old woman, holding a flaring candle sputtering in a heavy iron candlestick in her hand.

"She was evidently accustomed to this nocturnal summons, for she made no remark, not even casting a second look at the disguised Ogilvie, which that young gentleman considered rather a damaging proof of the colonel's morality.

"'Leave the door open and go to bed,' said Roche, taking the candle from her.

"The crone hobbled away without uttering a word. Roche led the way up a spiral stairway and ushered Ogilvie into his apartment. He placed the candle upon the table and laid his pistol beside it. Then he placed a chair, with much gallantry, for the supposed Lady Leithintie.

"Ogilvie trembled. The colonel was growing alarmingly sober. He was one of your sturdy veterans whose tempered brain, from long habit, easily dispelled the fumes of wine when action and thought were necessary. Ogilvie scanned his person curiously. A steel cuirass covered his broad chest, a heavy sword hung by his side, and the mate to the pistol that lay upon the table was in his belt. What chance would he, a stripling, have in an encounter with such a man?

"'I am not much of a clerk,' said the colonel, as he spread out a scrap of parchment and dipped a goose-quill in an old inkhorn, 'but I think I can manage this affair for you.'

"He scrawled and scratched at the parchment for awhile and then handed it to Ogilvie, who grasped it eagerly. One glance at it convinced him that it would be of infinite service to him should he encounter any troops of the Covenant in his flight.

"'Now one kiss to seal the bargain,' said Roche, rising.

"Ogilvie rose at the same moment, and grasping the pistol that lay upon the table by the muzzle, dealt Roche a terrific blow upon his bare forehead. Any ordinary man would have been killed outright by such a blow, but Roche, whose skull was like that of an ox, was only stunned and stretched senseless upon the floor.

"Ogilvie did not stop to examine his condition. Hastily disencumbering himself of his womanly attire he made free with one of the colonel's uniforms, wrapped himself in his cloak and hurried from the house. Thanks to his safe conduct, he found no difficulty in leaving the town, joined his friends and escaped in safety to France.

"Flora was reprimanded by the Covenant and her estate confiscated, but she was set at liberty, and in company with her mother joined Ogilvie in France. They did not return to Scotland until the restoration of Charles II.

"Colonel Roche, whose complicity in the affair was discovered, was discharged from the Covenant army, went to Germany and took service there, did some gallant fighting, and in one battle decided the fortune of the day by a desperate charge, became a general and a count of the empire and married the widow of a petty prince. So, you see, the adventurer realized his ambitious dreams.

"This is one of the stories suggested by the 'Slain Man's Lee.' One of these days I will tell you another about the young Master of Napier."

—George L. Aiken in True Flag.

This would seem a contradiction—is so, in fact, to the eye. But experience has proved its possibility. Take the case of the individual who dwells in a malarious reigon A robust constitution is no certain defence against the dreaded chills. What is? Recorded testimony, covering a period little short of half a century, proves that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is precisely this. This continent does not limit the field where the medicine has proved its efficacy. In South America, the Isthmus of Panama, Mexico, everywhere in fact where miasma-born disease takes on its most obstinate and formidable types, the Bitters is a recognized specific in illimitable demand, and prescribed by physicians of repute. Potent, too, is it in disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, and against that destroyer, la grippe. It improves appetite and sleep, neutralizes rheumatism and kidney complaints.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Deserving Praise.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. E. Wegner's Drug Store.

CUCUMBER and ELDER FLOWER CREAM.

Is not a cosmeticin the sense in which that term is popularly used, but permanently beautifies. It creates a soft, smooth, clear, velvety skin, and by daily use gradually makes the complexion several shades whiter. It is a constant protection from the effects of sun and wind, and prevents sun burns and freckles, and blackheads will not come while you use it. It cleanses the face far better than soap and water, nourishes and builds up the skin tissues and thus prevents the formation of wrinkles. It gives the freshness, clearness and smoothness of the skin that you had when a little girl. Every lady, young or old ought to use it, as it gives a more youthful appearance to any lady, and that permanently. It contains no acid, powder or alkali and is as harmless as dew and as nourishing to the skin as dew is to the flower. Price $1.00, at all druggists and hair-dressers, or at Mrs. Gervaise Graham's establishment, 103 Post Street San Francisco, where she treates ladies for all blemishes of the face and figure. Voters who desire to vote at the coming fall elections should see that their names are on the New Great Register, as the old register has been canceled. Call at once at his office in the Union Hotel.

Henry Baron, the artist, is just finishing several fine crayon portraits, full length, life-size, which he will ship from here in a few days, and before doing so will put them on exhibition at his studio on Napa street on the 7th and 8th of April. He will be pleased to receive all who wish to call. In the future he will make special prices and special accommodations for Sonoma Valley orders.

A Suggestion--Not a Kick This Time.

It may not be generally known, but it is nevertheless true, that Sonoma is the only incorporated town in the State that has not a watering trough for horses. Farmers and others who come to town to do their trading have no way of watering their horses unless they put them up in a livery stable or go into a saloon and borrow a water bucket which can be filled at a convenient well or faucet. In the one case it means 25 cents or 50 cents for horse feed and in the other drinks for the crowd. Now, as everyone having business in Sonoma may not have the money to spare to throw away on a horse that has already been fed at home, or to set 'em up, the poor animals often suffer from thirst. Farmers and other visitors to Sonoma complain bitterly of this oversight on the part of the city, and we have heard more than one visitor declare, when vainly seeking some place to water his horses, that he would never come to town again. In fact the absence of watering troughs in Sonoma is a subject of general comment. Therefore, we say, let the city erect two or three around the Plaza on the outer curbing of the same. Public hitching posts would also be a great convenience to the public if set up near the troughs. These latter would do away with the nuisance in front of all the business houses on the south side of Napa street in the shape of unsightly mud puddles which exist throughout the winter and spring months and which have to be filled in with gravel every year at the expense of the city. By all means let the city attend to this matter to the end that people will be encouraged to come to Sonoma instead of being driven away to other places which supply these modern county conveniences to all who come to town on business or pleasure.

The Law's Vexatious Delay.

The suit of Stephen Akers vs. Henry M. Hale et al., has been set for trial in the Superior Court at Santa Rosa for May 11th. This case very forcibly exemplifies the truthfulness of the saying that the "law's delays are vexatious." This contest is the outcome of the suit brought by Stephen Akers against the Shell heirs over 25 years ago to secure possession of a certain tract of land near Shellville. Mr. Akers after dancing attendance on the courts for almost half a life time finally won his suit before the highest judicial tribunal in the land—the United States Supreme Court—about two years ago. That ought to have put an end to the matter, but it did not. He is still lawing for his rights, the latter suit being, as it were, a side-show business to the original contest. Mr. Akers is now a very aged man, being nearly eighty years old, and ought to have secured his rights long ago.

A Distinguished Visitor.

Governor H. H. Markham, accompanied by a party of friends, paid Sonoma Valley a visit last Monday and Tuesday. They were the guests of Dr. and Mrs. Osborne of the Home for Feeble Minded Children. The Governor inspected the Institution and expressed himself as highly pleased with its management. He left Wednesday for Napa to visit the Asylum for the insane in that city.

This was the first visit of the Governor and he agreed with every one else who has visited beautiful Sonoma Valley that it was one of the gems of California.

Accident.

Ed. Gillan Sr., the well-known carpenter of this place, while working last Thursday morning on the old Fossett place, south of Sonoma, fell from the roof of a building he was shingling, a distance of 10 feet, and striking on his head suffered a severe scalp wound. He came to town for surgical treatment and Dr. Vance sewed up the wound, which is not considered dangerous.

Senator Fair's Ranch.

A large force of men are engaged on Senator Fair's ranch, a few miles south of Sonoma, in building fences, barns, training stables and other outbuildings. Work on the race track is also being pushed. A fine lot of horses and cattle passed through town one day last week for the ranch, which is destined at no distant day to be to Sonoma what Palo Alto is to Santa Clara.

The World Enriched.

The facilities of the present day for the production of everything that will conduce to the material welfare and comfort of mankind are almost unlimited and when Syrup of Figs was first produced the world was enriched with the only perfect laxative known, as it is the only remedy which is truly pleasing and refreshing to the taste and prompt and effectual to cleanse the system gently in the Spring time or, in fact, at any time and the better it is known the more popular it becomes.

CANDIDATES FOR TRUSTEE.

Who They Are?---Advice to Voters.

In another column City Clerk Breitenbach publishes the names of the candidates who have filed their certificates of nomination.

For City Trustees the candidates are L. Adler, Henry Seipp, S. Schocken and Wm. Trudgen. There are but two to be elected out of the four. The candidates are well-known to our people.

S. Schecken is a prosperous merchant and basalt block contractor. He has built a number of dwellings in Sonoma and in the past his quarries have given employment to hundreds of men. At the present time he has a project on hand to build an electric railway to connect his Sonoma quarries with tide water and making blocks on a gigantic scale. This might give employment to a few hundred men and make things lively in general in this town, therefore we don't think it advisable to encourage him. His enterprise should be discouraged, because don't you know, it might make money plenty and business brisk in this place. By all means don't let us have Schocken. He's no good because he's enterprising. He should be sat down upon. Avast!

Henry Seipp is a well-known young farmer. He has a fine cultivated orchard inside the incorporated limits, is well educated and an agreeable gentleman. He is also a prominent member of our local brass band and has considerable get up about him. Mr. Seipp has advanced ideas about town improvements and we think he would make an excellent Trustee, but as he is in favor of seeing the town going ahead and putting some life into its people he would be a dangerous factor in the Board. Be sure and scratch his name because if he is elected he might help Sonoma along. Down with him.

Lewis Adler is one of the oldest residents of Sonoma. He has lived here since 1846. He has had in the past much experience as a town Trustee, having served in that capacity years ago. He believes in improvement and at the present time is backing up that belief by erecting a fine plank sidewalk on First-street East. But horror upon horrors! He is also an advocate of bonding the town for needed improvements. Now, we don't want to improve because, don't you see, it might be the means of increasing the population and wealth of Sonoma. No Adler won't do. A man like him might improve the condition of the town. Fire him out.

Wm. Trudgen is a stone mason by trade and is also a farmer on a small scale. Since coming to Sonoma he has built a cosy cottage and improved several acres of ground surrounding the same. He has one of the prettiest little olive orchards in the State. He is a hard worker and everything he does he does well. He is a prominent member of a number of secret societies in town. Is well educated, an honest man and would make an excellent Trustee, but he like the others has foolish ideas about the town going ahead. He won't do at all. Bounce him. Throw him out.

Got His Just Deserts.

About the meanest wretch on earth is the wife-beater. He is a coward at heart and dare not stand up to a man of his size and resent an insult, but he delights in browbeating men who are physically unable to cope with him in a fistic encounter and by way of diversion gives his wife an occasional beating. Such a man is F. W. Duncan of Santa Rosa, who brutally beat his wife a couple of weeks ago. He was tried and convicted before Judge Dougherty and on Monday last was sentenced to two years in the Folsom penitentiary, the extreme penalty of the law. Judge Dougherty, in sentencing the miserable, thing remarked that he was sorry he could not make it ten years.

New Bridge to be Constructed.

M. K. Cady, accompanied by Roadmaster John Kearney, was in town Monday on business connected with the new bridge which is to be constructed over Sonoma Creek at Agnew's crossing. The contract for the bridge has been let and work on the structure will be commenced at once. The bridge will be a great accommodation to the people in the southern part of the valley and the traveling public in general and ought to have been built years ago.

This, therefore, is the only opportunity for our people to enjoy a rich musical treat by this celebrated orchestra.

A very enjoyable social gathering took place on Friday evening of last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson located four miles east of this city. Evergreens, wild flowers and fruit blossoms were tastefully arranged throughout the house. Fully fifty couple occupied the early part of the evening in dancing, many coming from Napa, Brown's Valley and adjacent places. Twenty couple left Sonoma in Harris' large buss and all who attended are loud in their praise of the warm hospitality and entertaining qualities of the Thompson family. At 12 o'clock a fine supper was served, after which dancing banished from the guests all thoughts of home until the hands of the clock pointed to an early hour in the morning. Girardi of San Francisco furnished the music for this affair.

His trial takes place to-day.

Mr. Leiss, one of Glen Ellen's most daring bear hunters, last Wednesday evening proposed a hunt to capture the bear that recently escaped from Dr. O'Donnell's ranch near town. Mr. Chas. Poppe, A. Reid, Mike Turley, Joe Schral and others circulated the report that the bear had been seen behind the school house with about four feet of chain attached to his neck and was likely to attack any one. Mr. Leiss suggested a number of clever schemes to capture bruin. He proposed, among other things to place a piece of cake in a tin pail and when the bear put his nose in the pail to eat the cake he would slip the handle over his head and in that way muzzle him. To test the courage of Leiss a job was put up on him. A couple of dog chains were secured by Reid, who secreted himself on the Mervyn hotel grounds to await the appearance of Leiss, the bear-muzzler. Suddenly as he came meandering along he heard a low growl and the rattling of the chains and with hair on end and eyes bulging out until one could have hung his hat on them he gave a series of unearthly yells and took to his heels. The daring bear muzzler may be running yet for aught we know.

He paid the fine. Mr. Pless, being of a kindly disposition, had no desire to press the prosecution of his assailant on account of his family, and interposed no objection to plea of defendant. M. B. AN OFFENSIVE PROVERB.

How an Innocent Little Remark Caused a Lot of Hard Feeling.

"Folks that quotes, had oughter be mighty keerful who they're hittin," said Abner Griggs, the wiseacre of Brookville Corners; "but then again," he added, "folks hadn't oughter be s'fearful tetchy, seems 's ef!" "Have you got anybody special in your mind, Uncle Abner?" asked the young man to whom the old farmer was talking. "Well, yes, I don't mind sayin t' I hev," replied Mr. Griggs. "O' course it's a statement 't bears on any number o' cases in a gen'ral way. But what ye was jest sayin 'baout takin up them keerless words o' Fred Jenkins' put me in mind o' th' Hill sisters, Susan an Rebecca; they died 'fore your day."

"What's the story? I've heard of 'em both," said the young man, as the old farmer paused for a moment, evidently lost in recollection.

"Well," said Uncle Abner, "ye see they was gettin on in years, but they didn't seem t' realize it. 'Twas common f'r folks t' speak of 'em as them two old Hill gals, but they never suspicioned it, not f'r a minute. But they was terrible tetchy, allus on th' lookaout f'r snubs an slights, an made it kind o' hard f'r folks.

"One evenin they went to a sewin bee t' Mis' Deac'n Emmonses. It appears 't someways or 'nother they thought 's much 's could be they was expected, when they wa'n't. That partic'lar bee was meant f'r th' young folks.

"Well, naow, Susan an Rebecca was a good forty years older 'n th' oldest o' th' rest on 'em. They didn't seem t' hev sense 'nough t' go away when they faound haow things stood, so they stuck right there. Mis' Deac'n Emmons, she was as perlite to 'em as she knew haow, but they seemed t' be kinder offish.

"Well, after th' bee was over, some o' th' young fellers come in—I was 'mongst th' lot—an they got to playin games. Th' Hill sisters, they staid right along, an th' young folks took 'em inter their fun; but they was kinder stiff, an didn't ketch holt o' th' games over'n above quick.

"Fin'lly one o' th' gals said, 'Le's play Shoutin Proverbs,' an little 'Mandy French, 't hed jest come home fr'm boardin school, she spoke up quick—she was kinder quick spoken allus—an says she, 'Oh, Shouting Proverbs is as old as th' hills!'

"An she never re'lized what she'd said till she see them two Hill sisters rise up as stiff 's a couple o' pokers, an make a curchy, each on 'em, t' Mis' Deac'n Emmons, an say, 'I'll bid ye good evenin!'

"Tw'n't no use tryin t' explain," concluded Uncle Abner with a reminiscent chuckle of amusement. "They allus thought t' th' day o' their deaths 't 'twas intended fer a slap right t' their faces. 'Tw'n't no good tellin 'em 'twas a common sayin, a kind of a proverb like! When folks wanted them Hill sisters to a getherin after that, they allus hed t' make a p'int of invitin 'em special, by word o' maouth, an they never went t' 'nother sewin bee, long 's they lived!"—Youth's Companion.

A Doctor for Meissonier's Dog.

Here is a good story of a doctor and a painter's wife. The doctor's name does not appear, but the painter was Meissonier. Mme. Meissonier sent for the family physician in a great hurry. He came, thinking some illness had overtaken the artist. But it was not the artist; it was only a lapdog. He pocketed his pride and attended the patient, who soon recovered. At the end of the year the bill came in, but there was no item for attendance on the dog. Mme. Meissonier noticed the omission and told the doctor to charge. He would not charge; he said he could not charge, he was not a vet. He was very glad to be kind to the dog, etc. The lady insisted. Well, said the doctor, the hinges of my garden gate are rusty; ask M. Meissonier to bring his brush and paint them for me.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Teeth of a Shark.

In respect to its dentition the shark is a very remarkable creature. The white shark has seven rows of teeth, while other species vary in the number of rows they possess. It must be understood, however, that the shark only uses one row at a time. The other rows lie down inside the mouth behind the edge of the jaw, erecting themselves when it is time for them to take successively the place of the first row. When one observes how keen edged these incisors are it seems no wonder that they can bite off a big rope as readily as if it were packthread.—Washington Star.

Children Are Really Animals.

The children of the frivolous and neglectful have certain chances which the carefully brought up children miss. For the first five years of a child's life, says the doctor, it should be treated like a little animal, with certain instincts and propensities that must be corrected as one corrects a puppy too mischievous or too snarling.—New York Evening Sun.
